Health Care and Public Policy
Fourth Edition
George Palmer, University of New South Wales and Stephanie Short, University of Sydney
This highly successful book, now in its fourth edition, is a standard text, providing a comprehensive analysis of health care and public policy in Australia. It explains what governments have done and what they can do about shaping Australia’s health care system; and considers the political, economic, social and epidemiological contexts within which health policies develop, and the forces that promote and oppose change. Major issues include health insurance, and the organisation and provision of hospital and medical services.

Managing Projects, Managing People
Third Edition
Michael Quinlan and Philip Bate, University of New South Wales and Felicity Lamm, Auckland University of Technology
People are far more likely to suffer a serious injury or disease from their work than from travelling in a car or from a crime of violence. The annual burden on the Australian community in terms of economic cost alone has been estimated to exceed $20 billion. As such, these impacts should be of concern to those providing health services, those responsible for managing workplaces or representing workers’ interests; the workers themselves, and the community in general. Overall, in the last 20 years it appears that occupational health and safety (OHS) has assumed greater significance for governments, employers, unions, professionals and workers in Australia and many other countries. Further, specific OHS issues have been accorded prominent attention in the media. Some recent examples include exposure to asbestos, smoking in the workplace, sexual harassment and occupational violence, work-related stress, and exposure to toxic chemicals, as well as debates over workers’ compensation claims.
The highly successful first and second editions became the definitive textbooks for this area of study. Its main aim was to encourage a more holistic, multidisciplinary and participative understanding of and approach to, managing OHS by bringing perspectives on occupational health and safety (OHS) and safety.

Contemporary Perspectives on Leadership
Edited by James Sarros, Professor of Management, Monash University.
Contemporary Perspectives on Leadership is about keeping up-to-date on the research and practice of leadership during dynamic times, in organisations as well as in our everyday lives, as individuals and as members of groups, as leaders and as followers. It shows that the skills required to lead in this changing workplace are multifaceted and demanding, but that some approaches hold fast regardless of the circumstances and background information about the authors.

Leading the Charge
Tony Zinni was commander in chief of CENTCOM and special envoy to the Middle East. Tony Koltz co-authored Tom Clancy’s Into the Storm and Battle Ready.

Leading the Charge is a visionary leadership book that examines the trends that have reshaped our world and the ways in which visionary leaders and organisations can effectively respond. Tomorrow’s successful leaders—in all fields—must know how to create, operate, and thrive in a very fluid, flattened, and integrated structures that are remarkably different from the traditional organisations we are used to seeing.

Performance Management Systems
Performance management is the process by which organizations set goals, determine standards, assign and evaluate work, and distribute rewards. But when you operate across countries and cultures, performance management systems must be able to be applied to a range of cultural values. One dimensional. HR managers need systems that can be adapted to the particular needs of their organisations and cultures.
